

IsHaunted — The visitor

Somebody with no account, who arrived from a search or a link. Written for a developer joining the project.

Every screenshot shows simulated, seeded data, captured in dark mode while signed in as this user type. Nothing here is a real person, case or investigation. Where a page shows a refusal, that is the designed behaviour for this seat.

The visitor is the largest audience and the one with the least patience. Everything they can reach is public on purpose: the site's whole growth argument is that somebody researching a haunted address finds a real archive rather than a sign-up wall.

What they can do: read the feed, browse public places and their archives, find groups near them, read published investigations, and ask a group for help. What they cannot do is anything tied to an identity — which is where the refusals below come from.

How this site decides what you may see

Two things gate every surface, and they are different questions:

Your seat in a group — owner, administrator, member, viewer — answers "may this person do this?". The group's plan answers "does this group pay for this at all?". A member of a group whose plan excludes an area is refused for a completely different reason than a viewer who is not allowed to write, and the site says which.

A refusal is never rendered as "nothing here." An empty list and a server saying no are different facts, and a page that shows the same grey nothing for both teaches people to distrust it. Every list goes through `LoadResult`, which carries loading, empty, refused, session-ended and rate-limited as distinct states — and every one of them has its own words on screen.

This matters when reading this document: where a screenshot shows a refusal, that is the designed behaviour for this seat, not a broken page.
