

IsHaunted — The client

Somebody who asked a group to investigate their home or business. Written for a developer joining the project.

Every screenshot shows simulated, seeded data, captured in dark mode while signed in as this user type. Nothing here is a real person, case or investigation. Where a page shows a refusal, that is the designed behavior for this seat.

The client is not a member of any group. They have one relationship — with the group working their case — and the site is deliberately narrow for them: their case, their messages, their evidence, and nothing about how the group runs itself.

This is the seat where privacy matters most. A private residence is redacted at display time rather than being stored differently, so what a client sees and what the public sees diverge on every render rather than depending on somebody having remembered to set a flag.

How this site decides what you may see

Two things gate every surface, and they are different questions:

Your seat in a group — owner, administrator, member, viewer — answers "may this person do this?". The group's plan answers "does this group pay for this at all?". A member of a group whose plan excludes an area is refused for a completely different reason than a viewer who is not allowed to write, and the site says which.

A refusal is never rendered as "nothing here." An empty list and a server saying no are different facts, and a page that shows the same gray nothing for both teaches people to distrust it. Every list goes through `LoadResult`, which carries loading, empty, refused, session-ended and rate-limited as distinct states — and every one of them has its own words on screen.

This matters when reading this document: where a screenshot shows a refusal, that is the designed behavior for this seat, not a broken page.
